

The Importance of CPR Training

Accidents happen. Serious injuries don't have to.

Accidents inevitably happen from time to time- and unless someone trained in CPR & First Aid is present, it is possible to suffer serious injury, or even death.

This is one of the many reasons why employers should invest time and money in preparing their employees for an emergency on the job.

Why CPR training is important in the workplace

- Saves Lives - According to the latest data, 90% of people who suffer from cardiac arrest die before they reach a hospital or medical care facility.
- Employees Can Use This Training Anywhere - The techniques they learn can be used anywhere. Employers should feel a sense of pride that their workers can help others around them if the need ever arises.
- Reduces Workplace Accidents - CPR and first aid training provide employees with the knowledge they need to drastically change the outcome of an emergency on the job and at home. Not to mention, the awareness that this training can inspire.
- Shows Employees The Company Cares for Them – People will always be motivated to work for a company that shows its concern for the people under its roof. Incorporating CPR training in your company's safety culture can help increase employee morale among many other benefits.

Contact Tracy Nelson - CAMComp Loss Control Consultant at tnelson@camcomp.net for more information and to answer any questions.